'TIS AN EDIFYING SPORT IF YOU HAVE A GUN

[illegible] That Will Double You Up [illegible] Year Or Two After You Have Got It—Habits of the Wild Goose in the Mississippi Valley.

(By [illegible] Correspondence.)

WESTON, Mo., Jan. 24.—Should you shoot a wild goose anywhere in the Mississippi valley it is apt to belong to one of three species—a brant, snow or chen. If it has black feet and bill it belongs to the first, the blue black goose, the true honkers and whistling fliers. If its head is only partly white, with the white cap and black running together, separated by a dark stripe, only down under the throat it is the common Canada species. The wing from bend to tip is usually more than sixteen inches and there is usually eighteen tail feathers. If the markings are the same but the bird smaller with the wing averaging less than sixteen inches—it is Hutchins goose, which there is usually twenty-two tail feathers, though these are apt to vary in number.

If your bird is similar in size to the latter, but has much white about the head you can suspect that the cackling goose (Branta Canadensis minima) [illegible] it from the northwest coast and you have got him. Now lastly if the bird is entirely black with a pair of white streaks on each side of the middle of the neck (Ridgway) it is the plain brant proper. In the black brant these streaks run into a white collar all around but be rarely gets to the coast of the Pacific. The whitened cheeked goose, strictly of the Pacific region completes the list of the American brants, sometimes the European barnacle goose strays across to our Atlantic coast.

Should a gray goose have red or reddish yellow feet and bill it belongs to either the grey lag or another genera. If the plumage is white, generally with black quills or at times a black patch it is one of the snow geese (chen) the greater measuring from 31 to 33 to thirty-eight inches long while the lesser is only from twenty-three to twenty-eight inches. If the body of the goose is gray with the head and upper neck white and the depth through the base of the bill more than a half the length along the [illegible] the blue goose, but if the greater part of the head is grayish brown—body gray with the belly speckled with black it is the white fronted or Gambel's goose.

The young of this and the blue goose or snow goose are apt to resemble each other confusingly but Gambel's belongs to the genus anser and has the depth of the bill at the base less than half of the length of the bill on top a characteristic independent of all states of plumage and noticeable at a glance when the goose is in hand. Ours differ so little from the white fronted goose of Europe as to have a geographical distinction only. These last geese are both much [illegible] skin to our [illegible] brants.

Most of our hunting in the west is trying to outwit the Canadian hawker. Shots at chen are largely incidents of his pursuit. On our prairies few birds are migratory, and to call a man a wild goose would be quite complimentary to his acumen and otherwise.

Here he may be said to be alm[illegible] in winter, for his migrations are often only flight from south on the river bar to field in the inland corn or wheat field. He has his favorite regions, and will pass high at [illegible] to pick the [illegible] at of the prairie [illegible]. Among them he has his favorite [illegible] to know these is the first element of his capture.

The writer lives about fifty miles from [illegible] of the two great western rivers. On [illegible] bars geese are plenty any favorable [illegible] ther in winter but those of the Mississippi have no roosting rarely. He will fly out each day often to within a few miles of the latter to feed, but will wing it back often making late hours into home to sleep upon the former. So too as if there were something in the lay of the land that influenced their alighting they are often seen south and [illegible] of here, but rarely north and west.

Thus western goose hunting consists much in local knowledge, there being certain regions that yield geese any good day as the hunter phrases it. Geese have another peculiarity that only recent acquaintance with the immediate feeding field can determine. They usually enter a field at a certain place day after day till they have good reason to change their route, and they come up from the river along well marked flight ways. To know these air paths and to place yourself well within them is perhaps element No. 2 of successful goose hunting.

Flights may have their times, too, of arriving. While this is not apt to be earlier than a half hour, it may struggle in all the forenoon through, but it would be poor policy to go out afterdinner for flight shots.

CANADA GEESE

Should one depend upon his hopes to approach a resting flock he may wait go one time as another after the geese arrive or before they come for that matter. It reminds one also of as much of his early sport on the bird's tail experience as any thing I know of.

There are times however when one can have some fine long range rifle practice at this sport but the farmer in the next quarter section is in more danger than the honkers.

There are lazy sunny thawy days however when much nearer approach is tolerated than others and a bird or so may be keeled over by a good shot.

A good goose day on the prairies is a damp lowering day with a threat of north west cold tomorrow. If the wind is a biting stiff it is no matter for the birds fly lower then because the gale is much nearer the earth on account of friction. A goose likes to make progress with the least work like other people. He can make use of the wind also in rising from the ground, a warm springing bird against a fair breeze gives to the hunter in the double chance of making the birds start toward him and approaches then down wind, prevent his scenting him.

But to flight shots again. If you do not live in the immediate neighborhood avail yourself of cornstalks, log wagon hedges or even the corners of rail fences near which you may have to lie flat in the grass. All these may be used for a shelter back and fore into the flock as it rises over but always wait till the birds are well past for the wing of a goose is so powerful that it will carry a bird off some distance at least in spite of shot. Keep under the wing as much as possible. It is a whole period perhaps that one will give the amateur hunter his opinion of the [illegible] penetration of his own shot, as a wing is as shock proof as Canada geese. The duck shot [illegible] you are apt to underest[illegible] the distance and speed and either [illegible] the shot [illegible].

The distance [illegible] is not always [illegible] but perhaps [illegible] always better held about the length of a duck or a goose and a half ahead in cross shots and a little up for if the game rises you it is always rising.

In mild damp spells geese will often roost over night on small prairie stock ponds in the middle west or on lakelets in the woods. By cautiously approaching these one may kill and cripple many before they escape, even by the most random flock shooting, but success depends greatly upon a cautious foot and a cool cranium. It is well to have a retrieving dog at your heels then, for while the goose does not dive he is an adept at crawling away and hiding when he finds he cannot fly. Some of the high banked ponds in the hardy-ness state are admirably adapted to this kind of hunting.

Lastly you may go to the river and put yourself in the path of the geese as they head at twilight for their roosting places. There if [illegible] quite well where and [illegible] you [illegible] the day. If a cripple falls in a lake with a little swift current in it be in it before that first dive comes. If built after the fashion of a raft it will as a rule [illegible] so has a wonderful [illegible] for the unusual.

Talk with a view for flight shooting the heavy gun you can well handle. Ten bores are usual but eight bores will be better. Some twelve bores that throw large shot well are often very effective. Many geese will pass in reach of duck with small shot for most days than with the large [illegible] BB. [illegible] I have seen a goose where it apparently had been penetrated by the shot and balled in feathers and stopped. The best flight shot is [illegible] I know of is [illegible] exclusively. Use the best powder you can. All young sportsmen but [illegible] the pattern of your shot be as small as your gun will pattern killingly. Take also a deal of patience and perseverance at it or full stake of caution.

ON THE FROZEN FIELDS

Skating and Ice Yachting Very Popular at Present in United States the Experts Use.

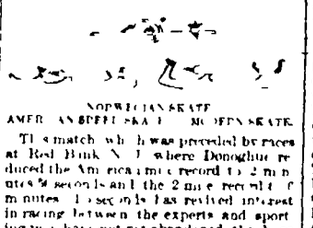
The skate and the ice yacht are monopolizing a large portion of public attention just at present and the cold snap has given both of them an opportunity to grow in favor among lovers of winter sport. Curling is quite the rage too among Scotchmen and Canadians, and the great international match for the Gordon medal between Canadian and United States clubs is scheduled for Feb. 5 to 15 at Albany. Montreal teams will represent the curlers of Canada and the Albany City and Empire City clubs will defend the honor of Uncle Sam.

Shinney or hockey, skate sailing, rink polo, tobogganing and snowshoeing are all growing in favor but skating is holding its own very well as the most popular winter sport in America. Columns have been printed of late about the proposed matches between Harald Hagen and Adolph Norseng the Norwegian champions, and Joseph F. Donoghue the American amateur champion, at Minneapolis, but thus far the skating for the world's championship has all been done on paper. Fred Breen and Hugh McCormick the Canadians have also attracted considerable attention and have [illegible] beaten by Hagen.

J. F. DONOGHUE A. G. FRANKLIN

Donoghue remained at Minneapolis for weeks endeavoring to arrange a match with either Norseng or Hagen but he was finally compelled to leave Minneapolis without succeeding in his mission. Then the swift young American became desperate and declared that he would skate Hagen, Breen, Norseng or any other man in America at any distance for $1,000 a side or for a bunch of bananas if they were unable to obtain backing. He also offered to skate Hagen five miles on the Hudson river and give him 30 seconds start. Donoghue's defiance was wasted on air so far as Hagen, Norseng, Breen and McCormick were concerned.

His offer to skate for pure sport against any one who would not get financial backing, however, was accepted by John Lunde, who is champion of the world at 100 miles, and Alfred B. Franklin another Norwegian, who claims to have done wonderful skating in Europe but who has never shown great ability here and the match was scheduled for Thursday, Jan. 26, at Stamford, Conn. Lunde is an old time skater and his record for 100 miles is 11 hours 37 minutes 45 seconds.



NORWEGIAN SKATE AMERICAN BEFFE SKATE MODERN SKATE

The match which was preceded by races at Red Bank, N. J., where Donoghue reduced the American record to 2 minutes 5 seconds and the 2 mile record to [illegible] minutes [illegible] seconds has revived interest in racing between the experts and sport lovers have not yet abandoned the hope that Donoghue Hagen and Norseng will yet come together in a great international contest.

The skate of today seems to be almost as perfect as human ingenuity can make it and when compared with the clumsy strapped on [illegible] skate of only a few years ago it is [illegible] by free recreation [illegible] the Yankee. Many [illegible] were required to fasten the old skate to the feet but there is no pressure of leather will firmly affix the modern skate to the foot. The speed skates which are designed for very swift work are growing in favor all over the world and the expert wears them. The old skate is [illegible] much larger than these very pleasing skates of [illegible].

The Norwegian pattern is very popular. It is [illegible] and is made of the very best steel. Experts like Dr. Glue, H. [illegible] Norseng [illegible] the [illegible] accounts in the break up [illegible] of champions have their speed skates firmly riveted to the specially made skating shoes they wear. It is said that the iron skate [illegible] was first used in 1772 when a squadron of Dutch warships was frozen in at Amsterdam. A rival power sent troops to capture the [illegible] Dutch [illegible] enemy [illegible] the Dutch.

Ice yachting is one of the most exciting and delightful [illegible] sports. It is [illegible] the Western lakes and along the Atlantic coast fall of the [illegible] Red and Wild Ka[illegible] Mitchell S. D. and Merced Cal. which are among the greatest [illegible] centers of the country are all after them. But some of the enterprising fancies Colorado Springs is also certain to secure the plum.

Very few people of the state have the [illegible] to steal a march at this [illegible] sport [illegible] all the [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] and the promoters of society and business men of England and America, who are their owners. Such an event was visible to the [illegible] and jolly [illegible] of fun lovers on the top of the earth as Red Bank [illegible] Colorado Springs. It would be the fastest time made on the North Shrewsbury this season.

SUCCESSFUL PLAYS.

THEY BRING GOLD AND GLORY TO THEIR AUTHORS

Not Pecuniary Inducements Offered by Dramatic Literature Have Strongly Tempted Such Writers as W. D. Howells and Richard Harding Davis.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—Dramatic literature seems just now to be fascinating or tempting some of the most [illegible] novel writers of fiction in this country as well as in England. Mr. J. S. Stimson who made a hit with his first novel and also scored a success in his dramatization of the Bar with a recent contribution to the literature of journalism. Has been tempted into play writing. He has added success as well with his plays as he did with his other dramatical work. So will he be [illegible] no longer to practice law if he relied upon that as a means of [illegible].

Mr. Richard Harding Davis has already had a [illegible] play produced with something [illegible] it is reported to be engaged upon a [illegible] drama. Mr. W. D. Howells has written a play which is to be produced by the venerable [illegible] Theater of Arts and Letters, and Mr. Howells' friends have known for a long time that he has had a strong ambition to write a successful play. Mr. Frank Stockton, Mr. Brander Matthews and it is said Mr. Thomas Bailey Aldrich have either written or are at work upon plays which will be early tested before critical New York audiences.

There is no doubt that the pecuniary rewards for successful playwriting account in a great measure for this tendency. When it was known that Bronson Howard had earned from royalties for the play of "Shenandoah" more than $100,000 and that his earnings as a playwright have reached the handsome sum of nearly $900,000 that news acted as a great stimulus to men who had won reputation with the pen of fiction. It was linked with the knowledge that Mr. William Gillette had made a fortune with his plays, and that Mrs. Burnett had received in a month for the production of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" almost as much as she had ever earned from her stories.

But the pecuniary stimulus is not the only one. There is a feeling that the time is approaching when the American public will accept with high favor a play which has the literary quality. This was demonstrated when Mr. Howard's last play, "Aristocracy" was produced. In construction the work is not so good as that displayed in some of Mr. Howard's other plays, and the comedy is forced and the motive is in places unreasonable. But the literary quality of the play is so brilliant that it has been accepted with delight by the more discriminating of the [illegible].

The literary quality was conspicuously effective in Mr. Augustus Thomas' purely American play called "Alabama," which was one of the greatest successes of the American stage achieved within the past two years. The exquisite literary finish and color appeared in Mr. Mansfield's most successful play, Beau Brummel, served perhaps as much as any other feature in the play itself to win for it the great victory it gained and there have been other manifestations that it is not a part of American theater goers to tire of plays which have no literary quality to commend them.

Mr. A. M. Palmer, who is considered perhaps the keenest of dramatic managers in his judgment as he certainly is one of the most cultivated and accomplished of men who have made the production of plays a business, was asked by the writer for some suggestions upon this point. He said that he had been persuaded for two or three years that American theater goers craved something that merely furnished amusement and he instanced a so called play that has been running steadily in New York for a year and a half which has no other merit in it than that it is clean and that it makes people laugh. Some other burlesques and farce comedies have proved to be successes. Yet Mr. Palmer believed that this may be a mere temporary tendency and he is convinced that there is [illegible] at hand when the more discriminating class of theater goers will be attracted by nothing in the way of a play which is without the literary quality.

"I saw Mr. Howard's play Aristocracy in rehearsal," said Mr. Palmer. "I had no pecuniary interest in it but I did have a great interest as a dramatic manager. The literary quality of this play delighted me and I was rejoiced that so brilliant a dramatist as Mr. Howard had not allowed himself to be tempted to sacrifice literature and had written a play in which it was demonstrated that a drama containing all the elements necessary for success might be written which was also good literature.

"The delightful literary quality impressed me when I read the manuscript of Mr. Thomas' play Alabama and I welcome the efforts which are being made by some of our more distinguished writers of fiction both to construct a play which is one thing and to give it fine literary quality which is another thing. These two elements are not inconsistent but are entirely consistent and proper and that is my new thing to say since we all know that some of the best acting plays written by the earlier English and French dramatists were also of beautiful literary quality. The trouble has been heretofore that persons writing with literary finish have been misled into the belief that a drama is perfect if it has a good dialogue. It may have brilliant dialogue sparkling wit and fine literary finish and yet after all be in thing but dialogue incapable of stage presentation. Now it is beginning to be understood that there must be expertness of construction the acting quality to make a play capable of stage presentation and when this is done it is quite possible to give to it fine literary form and I believe that we are soon to have dramatists who will give us plays of this sort."

IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN

The Great Coursing Meet at Colorado Springs Feb. 22.

The Cheyenne Coursing Club association has not to be held Feb. 22 at Colorado Springs has partly been the cause of developing a most important item of news which has been guarded very zealously by the keepers of Denver for several months past. The news was slipped from the leash yesterday by one of the most prominent coursing men in the west who happens to be in Denver at this time and it is simply that Colorado Springs is likely to secure the great meet at that place instead of being held in Denver. The fall of the Bend and Wild Ka[illegible] Mitchell S. D. and Merced Cal. which are among the greatest coursing centers of the country are all after them but some of the enterprising fancies Colorado have been sawing wood so hard and so persistently that, as this gentleman says Colorado Springs is also certain to secure the plum.

Very few people of the state have the nerve to steal a march at this [illegible] sport [illegible] all the [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] and the promoters of society and business men of England and America, who are their owners. Such an event was visible to the [illegible] and jolly [illegible] of fun lovers on the top of the earth as will be seen by their programme, of which the chief feature will be the great international run with entries of thirty-two dogs from England and the same number from America, making a "64 dog stake" of which the first money, $1,000, will go to the winner and second money $500 to the runner up.

The National Greyhound club also offers handsome solid gold and silver cups to the winners of first and second money. The entire affair will be under the [illegible] of the American Coursing club, the organization which confers the title of "Championship of America." It may be a source of satisfaction to those who are interested in scientific coursing to know that all the details of the affair which will be the largest ever held in this country were arranged at the last national meeting which the exact date and location of the event was postponed until the most acceptable inducements were brought forward. Colorado has put in a strong bid backed by plenty of western nerve and money and it is understood that there are plenty of rabbits at Colorado Springs.

In view of the action of the Cheyenne Coursing Club association has put forth a great effort for the event which occurs on Feb. 22 at Colorado Springs. The enclosure where the coursing occur will be three times as large as that of last season and it is [illegible] [illegible] yards longer. The club will also add to the stakes $[illegible] of which $500 to the winner and $[illegible] to the runner-up. These stakes are to be divided that 50 per cent goes to the first dog and 50 per cent of the remainder to the runner up while the second and fourth dogs secure 25 per cent each. Joe Halloway will act as judge and Arthur Masey will slip in his fair and admirable way. No muzzles will be used, and Mr. Rabbit will have to hoof it if he does not want to be eaten at the big spread of the club. The meeting will last two days beginning on the 22d and ending on the 23d.

Speaking of rabbits, live rabbits brings to mind the precautions which are now being undertaken by the club officials. It is being understood in a vague sort of way that the Colorado Humane society agent Mr. Hill would attempt to repeat his last year's "cruelty to animals" prerogative. The club has been acting under legal advice in the matter of running the dogs without muzzles and if necessary, they state Mr. Hill will be served with an injunction in order that no guests may be disappointed at all events they are hopeful, and perfectly confident that rabbits will be run to cover if it is George Washington's birthday, and George used to hunt foxes and rabbits himself and never knew anything about humane societies.

Among the well known and popular dog men who have signified their intentions of being at the meet is H. C. Lowe of Lawrence, Kan., and his cracks are Master Pete, Will o' the Wisp, Prince Charlie and Prince Rupert, which guarantees a fair number of the above list.

C. E. L[illegible] of Great Bend, Kan., [illegible] Barton, winner at Great Bend in October, and a dog that has a long list of victories. His Lady in Black is also a crack.

Arthur Massey of Great Bend has the crack, O'Rourke.

Mr. Muldoon is supposed to have some of the best bred dogs in the United States, and among them are the familiar Mist and Rab and Gleakirk, both winners in England, and a promising youngster in Roy.

La Moyne has Victoria, a bitch of Viola, the bitch that won at Colorado Springs in the same event. He also owns Vic's Oriental and Van Nest, both sires of Victoria, and Lady Gleadyne, a bitch daughter of Lady Gleadyne, winner in the World's fair coursing event of the world.

The St. Patrick kennels of Denver have some of the finest greyhounds in America, as their records prove. Notable among their entries is that of Broomie, a winner of second in the derby at Great Bend last year. He has never met defeat and was drawn when he was runner-up, owing to an injury received at that time. Dunnoway has been pronounced by the best coursing men to be the finest pup ever bred at Great Bend. The same kennels will enter Monk Bishop.

Mann Page enters Flashfoot and Wishern of Pueblo enters P. D. Q. and Punch Bryan of Pueblo enters Punch B. and Master B., while Dr. A. J. Cartwright of Denver will probably enter Gallant Boy, full brother to Boomerang.

Such a list practically includes the winning of the best dogs in America and S. W. Veller, steward of the club at Colorado Springs, is ready to give any information about the meet that is desired.—[Denver Times, Jan. 21.

THE MANLY VIRTUES.

An Instructive Discussion Upon a Difficult New Rating Dilemma.

Young Girl—Mamma, what are the manly virtues?

Mother—They are many, my child. The chief among them are courage, prowess and magnanimity.

Young Girl—Are [illegible] manly virtues out in this age?

Mother—Not indeed, my child they have rarely been found as they do today.

Young Girl—But, mamma there are no wars in our country today no savage tribes to the Indians no wild beasts to fight. How, then can courage be exercised when there are no dangers to confront?

Mother—You, err, my child in saying that man has no longer any enemies to war upon. Desperadoes, savages and wild beasts are not the only beings that can offer and do.

Young Girl—But what then is there left to make war upon?

Mother—Many creatures, my child. Among them I would name the predatory pigeon and the fierce and bloodthirsty rabbit.

Young Girl—And how is war made upon these dangerous creatures?

Mother—Weapons and methods vary. In the one instance powder and ball are used. The most deadly weapon that the genius of man has invented is employed against the predatory pigeon.

Young Girl—But mamma, the pigeon is a shy and swift marauder. Surely he who make war upon such an one must employ other means than mere powder and ball. He must be strong to walk great distances, he must be inured to exposure and fatigue, especially he must possess the keen eye, the ear and the intimate knowledge of nature which characterizes the true sportsman.

Mother—Ah my child you have much to learn on this great subject. The superior human intelligence is so wisely brought into requisition that no such special training, not even the most rudimentary knowledge of woodcraft is necessary. The fierce yet guileless creature is first ensnared then placed in a little box. The man stations himself with his gun ready for the attack. At a given signal the box is opened at a given point and moment the bird appears and the man fitted by long practice to excel as a marksman frequently kills or wounds the enemy of his kind and covers himself with glory.

Young Girl—And is manly courage exercised in this feat?

Mother—Yes my child. It requires great courage to handle firearms and no little skill to avoid shooting the spectators, an accident so fraught with unpleasant consequences to the marksman that only a man of tried courage would venture to take the risk.

Young Girl—Tell me mamma of man's attitude toward the bloodthirsty rabbit.

Mother—Ah my child there is here both courage and prowess.

Young Girl—What is the method pursued in this case and how are courage and prowess exhibited.

Mother—Courage is exhibited in the fear of personal encounter with the rabbit. The creature is placed by the hand of man in a bag or other receptacle where he is securely fastened in. Then a goodly company of the gallant and the brave, fully mounted, go forth to an open field bearing their dangerous prisoner in their midst. Numbers of swift and well trained hounds are also employed. This glorious battle ground is in the bloody Tray. The hounds are held firmly only held in leash until their fervent zeal must be let out of [illegible] At a given signal the thrilling moment is [illegible]. The rabbit is [illegible] happily bewildered by its sudden ejection from unaccustomed confinement to the free [illegible] of an unfamiliar field. It hesitates and is lost. In a twinkling the hounds are upon the creature and before it can sufficiently collect itself to do them any injury it is torn limb from limb.

Young girl—But, mamma I comprehend the courage of man in that first encounter you alluded to, but wherein is the prowess exhibited?

Mother—That, my child, is exhibited in the skill he shows in not allowing his horse to get entangled in the snarl of wrangling legs. The moment when the final event takes place is fraught with danger for the horses in the [illegible] and [illegible] upon an [illegible] and increasing beast.

Young Girl—I am [illegible] to know from your lips to that [illegible] the [illegible] when the [illegible] [illegible] in history.

REAL BIMETALLISM

The [illegible] although written [illegible] the [illegible] producing state of [illegible] interested a free coinage of silver he expressed no [illegible] free [illegible] of the paper for the [illegible] of his system having no silver in [illegible] and no [illegible] [illegible] He has [illegible] for [illegible] years of Asiatic Exchange Banking experience he is fully aware of the [illegible] attending the tinkering of silver and recognizes that unless bimetallism can be settled upon a secure and lasting basis it had better be severely left alone.

That it is advisable to admit silver with gold as money if possible upon a safe and lasting basis is now generally admitted as owing to the scarcity of the gold supply that metal is appreciating and thereby causing injustice to the debtor class.

The system of bimetallism here advocated is sound and tends to steady the purchasing power of money in the future and so is fair alike to the lending and borrowing classes also it is fair to the public and the government. It should be remembered that among the evils attending the tying of the government by unfair regulations in its dealings with the public is that foreign capitalists, through local agents can take a hand in despoiling the government. The change, although radical would be hardly apparent to the public as the value of the dollar remains unchanged, that is its purchasing power remains unchanged.

Before proceeding to explain this system which is simplicity itself let brief reference be made to the unfairness of free coinage as hitherto demanded, and let it be shown how such would soon become unworkable.

Free coinage as generally understood is for the public to take either metal to the United States mints and receive in exchange convertible notes, payable in gold or silver as the holders may wish, but leaving the government no option in which metal it will pay. This is manifestly unfair and against the government, and must end in the government parting with the more valuable metal and being left with the cheaper one, so ultimately preventing it being able to meet its obligations in both metals, when monometallism would result and that with the cheaper metal. In plain English gold is appreciating and silver depreciating the country would after awhile become a silver standard country, as India is now, as the gold parted with by the government would be hoarded, with that afloat in the country would be shipped abroad, where it would find a better market. How disastrous this would be to the country is too apparent to need explanation.

The system now advocated is fair both to the government and the public, and is: That the government open its mints to the free coinage of gold and silver equally, that is, if the public bring the government to issue it $100 of [illegible] it must bring $100 worth of gold and few worth of silver. The government [illegible] [illegible] for $100 good at any time upon presentation for $100 of mixed gold and silver, in the following proportions, each dollar to contain half the amount of gold in the present gold dollar and the equivalent of that amount of gold in silver at the official quotations, ruling when the notes are presented. The present silver nickel and copper coins to continue, as now, in use as tokens. All [illegible] adopting this system, to [illegible] to meet in a common [illegible] and fix the official quotation of silver from time to time. At first it would be necessary for the [illegible] to meet often perhaps every [illegible] month or oftener, as the value of silver would be rising, but before long supply and demand would find silver's level, and keep it from undue fluctuations since the mint [illegible] would be free [illegible].

The amount (i.e. weight) of gold in the mixed dollar would always remain the same, viz. half the amount in the present gold dollar while added to it would be fifty cents worth of silver at the prevailing rate.

Each nation adopting this system to do the same as regards their coinage, that is, to issue if the present amount of gold in their gold coins and only vary the amount of added silver. In this way would the purchasing power of money be settled, for silver, by thus aiding gold to perform its function as money, would relieve the present strain upon gold and so [illegible] metal's appreciation, or increase of purchasing power, but would in no way diminish gold from its present position. It may be urged that the mixed coins would be too bulky to handle, but no fear need be entertained on that point as governments [illegible] against the bullion deposited, would be the medium of exchange for home trade nor would the cost of international shipments be increased, as the shipping charges upon [illegible] are calculated in accordance with its value, not its bulk.

There is nothing in this system either to prevent the government from buying or selling each metal separately when it should think fit.

Why England avoids bimetallism and free coinage is because its systems hitherto adopted, have been as before explained here, unfair to the government and therefore unsound further as causing the disappearing of money in any country adopting them. In England it was it would be particularly unwise, for as she is the world's creditor she naturally has no wish to have her loans repaid in cheaper moneys than those in which she lent. She would however not be adverse to adopt a bimetallism that would not disturb the value or purchasing power of her money, nor drive gold from the country, but yet be the salvation of India and a boon to her Manchester trade. This system answers to these requirements. Small opposition to the adoption of this system of bimetallism would be experienced from Europe were America and England favorable to the same as the Latin leagues (France, Italy and Belgium) may be accepted as fair rule to the admittance of [illegible].

N. B.—I have not [illegible] figures and [illegible] as this paper is [illegible] for popular circulation [illegible] especialists.

As such system brought forward must have a name for reference when under discussion let this be called the Vacher system.

HAWAIIAN ANNEXATION

It is useless to try to minimize the importance of the revolution in Hawaii. The leaders of it are the most prominent men of the islands and represent the largest interests there. They form for the present the de facto government. They send a request to be taken under the protection of the United States. The answer must be prompt and clear.

The treaty or convention of 1844 between France, England and the United States guaranteed the independence of Hawaii. If the Hawaiians are independent, they have a right under the convention, to ask to be annexed. Whether we have a right therefore to annex them is a question with two sides to it. Certainly Great Britain is likely to object, and perhaps France also. But if we do not take the islands, Great Britain will take them first, and discuss the right to do it afterwards. That is the English way.

The American interests involved in Hawaii are probably at least ten times as great, measured financially as the English and French interests combined. Strategically the proportion, though not nearly susceptible of determination is at least as great. Certainly if anybody is to annex the islands we ought to be the annexers.

A precedent for annexation is found in the case of Texas, but we would have even a better case here than we had in 1845 against Mexico. But precedents are not necessary, although scores of them could be found in the acts of Great Britain for two centuries past.

It is time for American legislators to broaden their view, to perceive that we can no longer maintain the attitude of isolation from international affairs that was practically advisable in the infancy of our republic, and that we must either [illegible] ourselves as one of the leading nations of the world or be content to be relegated to the position of a second or third rate power, whose interests are not worth consulting seriously. We cannot sit still, if we do not go forward, we go back. If we sit still, we allow the Panama isthmus and the Nicaragua Canal the natural commercial bounds of the United States to pass into the hands of some European power, we allow the Hawaiian islands in which are invested $75,000,000 of American money, which have been Christianized by American missionaries and a majority of whose intelligent inhabitants are Americans, to be swallowed by Great Britain, we allow the commerce of the other American republics to be monopolized by foreigners, and the carrying and eventually the trade of the continent to be done by European steamships.

If we do this, we shall prove traitors to the destiny of the Republic. We hope that Congress will take the larger view, and will be patriotic enough, and far sighted enough to do something towards providing now for the Greater America that is bound some day, if the American people are true to the flag to come upon this western hemisphere.

THE MEETING OF PARLIAMENT

To-day the British Parliament begins a session which promises to be one of the most eventful for many years. Mr Gladstone has at his back a nominal majority of about thirty seven, but it is composed of such heterogeneous elements that it is as likely as not to go to pieces on some one of the many snags that lie in the course.

This Parliament was elected mainly on the Home Rule issue, and ministers have ready a Home Rule bill, the details of which however have not yet transpired. A tremendous effort will be made to pass this bill but there is danger of the defection of some of the moderate Liberals especially if the bill provides for Irish representation at London as well as at Dublin. Then if the Home Rule bill blocks the way too long the Radicals and Socialists and Labor men will grow restive and demand that it make way for their reform measures.

Besides all this, there is always the danger of some question of foreign politics coming in to upset the plans of ministers. This Egyptian complication or even possibly the case of Hawaii, may grow to such dimensions as to dwarf the Home Rule bill by contrast.

Opposed to Mr Gladstone and his conglomerate following is a solid compact body of men who will act together on every question and whose discipline will make their attacks terribly effective.

Notwithstanding all the difficulties that are clearly in his path Mr Gladstone enters upon his task with characteristic buoyancy and optimism. He knows no such word as fail. His health and energy are astounding almost preternatural. If he does succeed in carrying his Home Rule bill through it will be perhaps the greatest feat of personal parliamentary prowess ever exhibited to a wondering world.

STRIKERS TYRANNY

The action of the strikers at the Brooks locomotive works at Dunkirk N Y in forcing anew the tyranny of some labor organizations seek to lay upon all workmen pursuing the same trade.

Some time ago the riveters in the boiler department of the works refused to work under two contractors Kane and McNamara alleging that they were badly treated by the foremen named. The company sent to Philadelphia and obtained men to take the places of those who had struck. Sunday night two of the new men ventured outside of the works and were followed home by a howling mob of strikers and their sympathizers. The Sheriff of Chautauqua county, fearing that he could not handle a mob of six hundred rioters, telegraphed for help. Now the striking [illegible] are very angry at "military interference," and are talking about an invasion of their rights.

If the riveters did not want to work under certain contractors, they have a right to quit work, but they had no right whatever to prevent other men who want that work from taking it, or to assault the men who took their places. The workmen from Philadelphia had a perfect right to take the job that was offered them and their assailants should be promptly arraigned and punished by the civil officers of the law. The State is bound to maintain order and if the public peace is threatened by a mob too large for the Sheriff to handle he is justified in sending for troops to preserve the peace.

Such acts as this at Dunkirk are a direct result of the loose talk that was indulged in by many newspapers at the time of the Homestead strike and the utterances of some Democratic legislators in the halls of Congress. Those strikers have been taught by men like Senator Palmer that they own the works in which they labor and have a right to dictate who shall be therein employed. Fortunately no court has yet been found to uphold this monstrous doctrine and the great majority of the American people still believe in the right of every man to obtain employment wherever he can regardless of the threats or the bulldozing of discharged employees who belong to some sort of a union. If this trouble continues, we hope that Governor Flower will prove himself equal to the emergency.

THE ANTI OPTION BILL

The bill which Senator Washburn of Minnesota has been trying to get through the Senate for several weeks past is a long involved cumbrous and complicated measure. The gist of it however can be told in a few words. Briefly it proposes to lay such a heavy tax upon all dealings in "futures" or "options" as to prohibit such transactions. The object of Mr Washburn and the other friends of the bill is not a moral one, to prevent gambling it is a material one, to raise the price of farm products.

The first thing to be considered when any act of legislation is proposed is its constitutionality. Is the prohibitory taxation of any particular business, for the purpose of raising the price of the goods produced in another business, among the powers granted to the Congress in our Constitution?

The Senators who approve the bill cite two passages from the Constitution to prove that the power exists. First, that Congress has the power to lay and collect taxes, etc., to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States and, that Congress has the power to regulate commerce among the several States.

To these citations the Senators opposing the bill reply that taxation is not taxation at all when it is levied, not for the purpose of raising revenue either directly or indirectly but simply to prohibit that which is taxed, and second, that dealing in options and futures is not interstate commerce. It is true that Congress placed a prohibitory tax on State bank notes but the power to do that is found in the Constitution—so the supreme court has decided—not in the taxing clause, but in the clause which confers the power to regulate the value of money.

It has been alleged that if the taxing clause does not confer the power to prohibit, then high protective duties are unconstitutional, but they can be maintained under the clause conferring the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

If the bill is unconstitutional there is no practical use in discussing it further. Gambling in options, like other gambling is an evil but under our present constitution the police power is left to the several States, and no national legislation can directly prohibit gambling or drunkenness or any other thing of the sort.

As for the expressed purpose of the bill Mr Washburn may be sure that its enactment would raise the price of farm products, but that is not demonstrable and even if it were we are not so sure that it would be a wise act to legislate directly for the benefit of a certain class at the expense of the rest of the community.

A great many newspapers Republican as well as Democratic, are announcing themselves in favor of the election of United States Senators by popular vote. That may be all very well, but the bill to that effect which has passed the House of Representatives includes a section which takes away the constitutional power of Congress over the election of Senators. This is a matter that ought to be considered separately and not rushed through as a "rider" on the back of a bill for a different purpose.

The cuts in the Denver newspapers bore a striking likeness to Queen Liliuokalani. In fact the four of them seemed to cover the whole range of physiognomical possibility.

Connecticut a Democratic legislature has refused to confirm the appointment of Prof Simeon E. Baldwin as a Judge of the Supreme Court. He is not their kind of a Democrat.

HAWAIIAN ANNEXATION

It is useless to try to minimize the importance of the revolution in Hawaii. The leaders of it are the most prominent men of the islands and represent the largest interests there. They form for the present the de facto government. They send a request to be taken under the protection of the United States. The answer must be prompt and clear.

The treaty or convention of 1844 between France, England and the United States guaranteed the independence of Hawaii. If the Hawaiians are independent, they have a right under the convention, to ask to be annexed. Whether we have a right therefore to annex them is a question with two sides to it. Certainly Great Britain is likely to object, and perhaps France also. But if we do not take the islands Great Britain will take them first, and discuss the right to do it afterwards. That is the English way.

The American interests involved in Hawaii are probably at least ten times as great, measured financially as the English and French interests combined. Strategically the proportion, though not nearly susceptible of determination, is at least as great. Certainly if anybody is to annex the islands we ought to be the annexers.

A precedent for annexation is found in the case of Texas, but we would have even a better case here than we had in 1845 against Mexico. But precedents are not necessary, although scores of them could be found in the acts of Great Britain for two centuries past.

It is time for American legislators to broaden their view, to perceive that we can no longer maintain the attitude of separation from international affairs that was eminently advisable in the infancy of our republic, and that we must either assert ourselves as one of the leading nations of the world or be content to be relegated to the position of a second or third rate power, whose interests are not worth consulting seriously. We cannot sit still, if we do not go forward, we go back. If we sit still we allow the Panama isthmus and the Nicaragua Canal then natural commercial boundaries of the United States to pass into the hands of some European power, we allow the Hawaiian islands, in which are invested $25,000,000 of American money, which have been Christianized by American missionaries, and a majority of whose intelligent inhabitants are Americans, to be swallowed by Great Britain, we allow the commerce of the other American republics to be monopolized by foreigners, and the carrying and coastwise trade of this continent to be done by European vessels.

If we do this, we shall prove traitors to the destiny of the Republic. We hope that Congress will take the larger view and will be patriotic enough and far sighted enough to do something towards providing now for the Greater America that is bound some day, if the American people are true to their trust to come upon this western hemisphere.

THE MEETING OF PARLIAMENT

To-day the British Parliament begins a session which promises to be one of the most eventful for many years. Mr. Gladstone has at his back a nominal majority of about thirty seven, but it is composed of such heterogeneous elements that it is as likely as not to go to pieces on some one of the many snags that lie in the course.

This Parliament was elected mainly on the Home Rule issue and ministers have ready a Home Rule bill, the details of which, however have not yet transpired. A tremendous effort will be made to pass this bill but there is danger of the defection of some of the moderate Liberals, especially if the bill provides for Irish representation at London as well as at Dublin. Then if the Home Rule bill blocks the way too long the Radicals and Socialists and Labor men will grow restive and demand that it make way for their reform measures.

Besides all this, there is always the danger of some question of foreign politics coming in to upset the plans of ministers. This Egyptian complication or even possibly the case of Hawaii may grow to such dimensions as to dwarf the Home Rule bill by contrast.

Opposed to Mr. Gladstone and his conglomerate following is a solid compact body of men who will act together on every question and whose discipline will make them strongly effective.

Notwithstanding all the difficulties that are clearly in his path, Mr. Gladstone enters upon his task with characteristic buoyancy and optimism. He knows no such word as fail. His health and energy are astounding almost preternatural. If he does succeed in carrying his Home Rule bill through it will be perhaps the greatest feat of personal parliamentary prowess ever exhibited to a wondering world.

STRIKERS TYRANNY

The action of the strikers at the Brooks locomotive works at Dunkirk, N. Y., illustrates anew the tyranny which some labor organizations seek to establish over all workmen pursuing the same trade.

Some time ago the rivetters in the boiler department of the works refused to work under the contractors, Shane and McNamara alleging that they were badly treated by the two men named. The company sent to Philadelphia and obtained men to take the places of those who had struck. On Sunday night two of the new men, "ventured outside of the works" and were set upon and beaten severely. The Sheriff of Chautauqua county, arriving that he could not handle a mob of six hundred rioters, telegraphed for troops. Now the strikers are very angry at "military interference," and are talking about an invasion of their rights.

If the rivetters did not want to work under certain workshops they have a right to quit work, but they had no right whatever to prevent other men who want that work from taking it, or to assault the men who took their places. The workmen from Philadelphia had a perfect right to take the job that was offered them and their assailants should be promptly arraigned and punished by the civil officers of the law. The State is able to maintain order and if the public peace is threatened by a mob too large for the Sheriff to handle he is justified in sending for troops to preserve the peace.

Such a state of things at Dunkirk are a direct result of the lose talk that was indulged in by many newspapers at the time of the Homestead strike and the utterances of some Democratic legislators in the halls of Congress. Those strikers have been taught by men like Senator Palmer that they own the works in which they labor and have a right to dictate who shall be therein employed. Fortunately no court has yet been found to uphold Palmer in this pernicious doctrine and the great majority of the American people still believe in the right of every man to obtain employment wherever he can regardless of the threats or the bullying of discharged employees who belong to some sort of a union. If this trouble continues, we hope that Governor Flower will prove himself equal to the emergency.

THE ANTI OPTION BILL

The bill which Senator Washburn of Minnesota has been trying to get through the Senate for several weeks past is a long involved cumbrous and complicated measure. The gist of it however can be told in a few words. Briefly it proposes to lay such a heavy tax upon all dealings in futures or "options" as to prohibit such transactions. The object of Mr. Washburn and the other friends of the bill is not a moral one to prevent gambling, it is a material one, to raise the price of farm products.

The first thing to be considered when any act of legislation is proposed is its constitutionality. Is the prohibitory taxation of any particular business, for the purpose of raising the price of the goods produced in another business, among the powers granted to the Congress in our Constitution?

The Senators who approve the bill cite two passages from the Constitution to prove that the power exists. First, that Congress has the power to lay and collect taxes, etc., to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, second, that Congress has the power to regulate commerce among the several States.

To these citations the Senators opposing the bill reply that taxation is not taxation at all when it is laid, not for the purpose of raising revenue either directly or indirectly but simply to prohibit that which is taxed and second, that dealing in options and futures is not interstate commerce. It is true that Congress placed a prohibitory tax on State bank issues, but the power to do that is found in the Constitution — so the supreme court has decided — not in the taxing clause, but in the clause which confers the power to regulate the value of money.

It has been alleged that if the taxing clause does not confer the power to prohibit, then high protective duties are unconstitutional, but they can be maintained under the clause conferring the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

If the bill is unconstitutional there is no practical use in discussing it further. Gambling in options, like other gambling is an evil but under our present constitution the police power is left to the several States, and no national legislation can directly prohibit gambling or drunkenness or any other thing of the sort.

As for the express purpose of the bill Mr. Washburn may be sure that its enactment would raise the price of farm products, but that is not demonstrable and even if it were we are not so sure that it would be a wise act to legislate directly for the benefit of a certain class at the expense of the rest of the community.

A great many newspapers Republican as well as Democratic are announcing themselves in favor of the election of United States Senators by popular vote. That may be all very well but the bill to that effect which has passed the House of Representatives includes a section which takes away the constitutional power of Congress over the election of Senators. This is a matter that ought to be considered separately and not rushed through as a rider on the back of a bill for a different purpose.

The cuts in the Denver newspapers bore a striking likeness to Queen Liliuokalani. In fact the four of them seemed to cover the whole range of physiognomical possibility.

Connecticut's Democratic legislature has refused to confirm the appointment of Prof. Simeon E. Baldwin as a Judge of the Supreme Court. He is not their kind of a Democrat.

The Homestead Poisoning

Those who wish to think charitably of their fellow man find it hard to believe that any man could be guilty of the atrocity of which Hugh E. Dempsey master workman of District Assembly No. [illegible] of the Knights of Labor has been found guilty, but, so far as we can judge from the very imperfect reports of the case which have reached us through the papers, the jury could have reached no other conclusion. The analysis of the bodies of some of the non union men who sickened and died while at work in the Homestead mill showed that the deaths were caused by poison, the testimony of an alleged accomplice in the crime who himself gained admission to the works and mixed the poisons in powders in the food fastened the crime upon the accused. Other evidence confirmed the accomplice's testimony, and, finally Mr. Dempsey's denial under oath when placed upon the witness stand seems from reports of his conduct and appearance, rather to have confirmed than refuted the charges against him. The judge's charge was absolutely impartial, leaving the questions of fact wholly with the jury. The murder was itself the culmination of a series of wrongful acts, each leading on to one that is worse, first, the assumption that capitalists and laborers are natural enemies, not partners in a common enterprise, then a declaration of war between them, then an edict issued by an irresponsible body that no non union man should work in the mills, then mob violence to carry that edict into effect and finally murder by the slow process of poisoning. Even if on appeal the verdict against Mr. Dempsey should be set aside and he should be acquitted, and we by no means deny the possibility of such a result—the awful fact still remains that non union men were poisoned because they had dared to take the work of the union men at wages which the latter had refused. Whatever differences of opinion may exist as to the labor question, there can be none that there is no place in America for the methods of secret assassination, and that punishment of such methods cannot follow too quickly upon the discovery of the crime.—[Christian Union.

Repeal of the Silver Purchase Act.

There is every probability that the bill of the banking and currency committee, or something equivalent to it, will pass the house. The senate will then be compelled to show its hand. If Senators Stanford and Teller then attempt to talk the bill to death, we shall know that the silver purchase act is doomed, and that its fate will be sealed at no very distant day.

The story has got abroad that it is doomed. It is believed not only in Europe but in America that America will soon stop buying silver. As a consequence commodities have begun to advance now there and here, and India has begun to agitate the question more than ever. A committee of the India council, of which Lord Herschell is chairman is holding almost daily sittings and taking testimony from every quarter, and is apparently as far as every from reaching any decision. The cultivators of the soil in India have begun to make themselves heard and they are as might be expected, opposed to any change in the monetary standard. Their taxes are payable in rupees, and they have been gaining in this particular while the rupee has been falling. Their produce is sold for gold and their rents are payable in silver. The loss falls on the government and on the government's creditors, in so far as the claims of the latter are payable in rupees. The cultivators say that they are the people of India—that the government's creditors are mostly Europeans who have no permanent residence there or middlemen or dwellers in cities, who are only an imperceptible part of the population. They say also that any step which should amount to a change of the standard of value would demonetize more silver in the form of ornaments than in the form of coin—that the country people have always been in the habit of putting surplus in this form knowing that it could be turned into money at any time. To take away this right, they say would be an act of injustice. At all events the common people would never be able to understand the reasons for it. Hence very grave consequences of a political nature might be apprehended. The silver party in India contend that nothing can be done but to stand and take the consequences, even if America stops its silver purchases altogether.—New York Evening Post.

A Lugubrious Christmas Present

I fancy I am making a Christmas gift to a woman in a drug shop which will not be duplicated in the whole city. That day went on pointing to a large package the clerk was addressing as he handed bottles of cod liver oil [illegible] woman I know who needs just that tonic and has not a cent to spare to buy it. I am sure that she will be pleased, but she will take the oil and that is my cause of concern. But it isn't an altogether appetizing box of Christmas bonbons is it? Mr J N Doan of Aspen was a visitor in the city yesterday

Geo F Sharer of Ecom at has filed his notarial bond with the county clerk

Rev J H Gregg will preach in the Second Congregational church this evening

Mr J H Hutchinson secretary of the Denver Mining exchange, was visiting the brokers about town yesterday

Mr Frank Smith, son of Eben Smith of Leadville, is in town upon business connected with mines in the Cloud City

Mr F L Ogden a prominent mining man of Aspen with Mrs Ogden, were visitors in the city yesterday They are stopping at The Antlers.

Cornelius Sutton, aged 71 years an old resident of the city and a member of the Baptist church, died in this city Sunday The funeral was held from the church yesterday afternoon

Phoenix Encampment No 21 requests all members of this branch of Oddfellowship to be present at the meeting this evening Work in the Royal Purple degree.

Reserved seats are selling rapidly for the concert to be given by Stark's Austro-Hungarian orchestra at the opera house on Thursday evening Professor Stark promises his friends a fine concert

Mr. John Q Royce returned to the city yesterday for a short stay. Mr Royce is now living at Topeka, and states that an effort is to be made to prevent the confirmation of H. H Artz as adjutant general.

Mr. Charles F Nelson, locator of the Del Monte at Cripple Creek and also largely interested in the Nelson Tunnel, was in the city yesterday. Mr Nelson says that Cripple Creek camp is forging ahead very rapidly.

At the last regular meeting of El Paso lodge A F. and A. M., Col. L. C. Skinner was presented with a handsome gold headed cane This was in recognition of the colonel's long and faithful services as treasurer of the lodge.

An informal entertainment by the pupils of Prof. F. A. Price and Mrs C E. Baldwin will be given at Hext & Williams's piano rooms, at No. 21 North Tejon street, this evening A splendid programme has been prepared. There will be no charge for admission

The live stock, carriages, harness etc., of the Buckeye livery were sold yesterday at public auction under a mortgage held by the El Paso County bank The sale was held in front of the barn, and the bidding was rather slow It is believed the property will bring enough to cover the debts.

China Jim, the popular and enterprising merchant on Pike's Peak avenue, leaves next week for a trip to his old home in China He will be absent several months and will bring back a big stock of goods Jim was in China two years ago. During his absence Ye Wing will have charge of the store.

The "attraction" at the opera house last evening was attractive enough to draw out a good-sized audience, in spite of the windy weather Turner's English Girls, with Geo. H. Turner and Fred Barth the comedians gave a very good variety performance, with interesting novelties Some of the dialogue was not in good taste, but the entire performance was free from positive vulgarity. Decidedly the best of the entertainment was the miscellaneous first part, while the "burlesque" "Cleopatra" was pointless and rather tedious. It was hard to determine where the "Cleopatra" came in. The dancing was unusually good throughout, but the singing was poor as a rule Miss Nellie Russell made a good appearance as the leader of the English Girls, and performed her solo parts very satisfactorily The best feature of the show is the mirror dance of the Henley sisters, a novelty

A Grand Hunt.

A special train over the Rock Island road, consisting of a passenger car and two cars for horses, will leave the Rock Island depot on Wednesday morning at 1 o a m for a grand coursing meeting under the auspices of the Country club returning at 4 p m the same evening Horses must be at the loading station at Rush well at 8 30 a m sharp Ladies and gentlemen wishing to attend the hunt will please hand in their names without delay to any of the following gentlemen Messrs E. C. G Robinson, J I Scott, W F Fisher and Sam W Vider, steward of the Country club The place of meeting will be at Calhan where rabbits are reported very plentiful

Mrs. J. W. Stillman Dead

Mrs. Frances Stillman, wife of ex Mayor J W Stillman, died at her home on North Nevada avenue, yesterday afternoon at 12 30 o'clock Mrs Stillman's death was not unexpected as she has been seriously ill for the past three weeks She was attacked first with rheumatism this was followed by nervous prostration and last Saturday she had a stroke of paralysis Mrs Stillman was 63 years of age at the time of her death Mr and Mrs Stillman were married in Connecticut in 1848, and soon afterward moved to Wisconsin where they resided for many years In 1871 they came to Colorado Springs Mrs Stillman's death brings sorrow into one of the pleasant homes in the city and those who are left to mourn have the sympathy of many friends.

The remains will be buried in Evergreen cemetery but the hour for the funeral has not yet been announced

Mr Charles Dickson

Those of our theater goers who enjoy an evening of hearty laughter should not fail to attend the opera house next Saturday evening, for on that date America's foremost light comedian will make his appearance here in a play that found favor of all who saw Mrs. Piggsby's "Incog"

It is almost superfluous to say anything regarding this play, for no comedy has achieved greater fame in less time than has this "Incog," nor could it have the success wherever it has been produced unless it had merit of the real kind of unanimous praise from both press and public in every city where it has appeared Indeed its merits must have been great to have enabled it to have made for itself the record it has attained, that of running 100 nights in New York and fifty each in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and San Francisco and it has just closed a most remarkable return engagement in Denver where it played last week to the capacity of the Tabor Grand

"Incog" is a pure wholesome comedy being untainted by even a hint of vulgarity or broadness and our feminine theater goers can go to see it with the assurance that nothing that they see or hear will offend them
